Summer and Spring Weather Can Cause Damage, Are Your Customers Ready?

Power problems like spikes, surges, brownouts, and outages can damage computers and sensitive electronics.

SUMMER HEAT & BLACKOUTS

Utility grids are often strained beyond capacity due to the increased use of air conditioners. Power utilities adjust their voltage output, sometimes causing erratic power sags and spikes, which are dangerous to computers and stored data.

LIGHTNING

Each flash typically contains about 1 billion volts and between 10 and 20 thousand amps of current. Current can transfer through wiring or plumbing and destroy everything in its path, including hardware and data.

TORNADOS

The unique geography of the U.S. produces favorable conditions for tornados, resulting in about 1,000 every year, according to The Weather Channel. Highly unpredictable with winds speeds reaching 300 mph, a tornado is the most destructive storm of all, ripping up utility lines and leading to lengthy, unexpected blackouts.

HURRICANES

Hurricane dangers including storm surge, high winds, heavy rains can all lead to prolonged power outages. Forecast predictions for 2009 Atlantic storm season anticipate a well above average hurricane season.
